PROMOTING ORGANIC FARMING

A.S. Rajput, Pranab Kumar Ghosh and Anjali Prasad

The spread of Covid-19 worldwide has had a tremendous effect on mankind. In India, since the beginning of the pandemic, people started improving and boosting their immunity. At this point, people are not only talking about boosting immunity, they are also becoming more aware of what they are consuming. This situation has also led to promotion of organic food for human safety, more specifically human immunity. It is believed that more vitamins, trace elements and probiotics present in organic food will help to fight, or at least to prevent the Covid-19 infection. Even before the outbreak of the pandemic, the new plant protection code was published in 2017-18 by Government of India that reflected the intention of Government towards the promotion of alternative methods instead of conventional methods through banning many pesticides and herbicides. The growing problem of pest resistance, pesticide residue in crop and soil, health hazards of farmers as well as consumers, cancellation of consignment in international markets are the major effects of indiscriminate and frequent uses of chemicals in agriculture. Chemical fertilizers are not only disturbing the flora-fauna of soil microbiome but also affecting its natural fertility and productivity. A recent report of Food Safety and Standards Authority of India (FSSAI) revealed that the foods which general population are consuming are full of pesticides and even some are not at all edible and categorized under 'poison' with high amount of lead in them due to pesticide application.

Organic agriculture contributes to ensuring the five securities in an integrated whole: environmental security, economic security, nutritional security, health security and food security. It also plays a role in poverty alleviation by combining many features like increasing yields in low-input area, conserving biodiversity and natural resources on the farm and its surrounding area, increasing income and reducing costs, producing safe and varied foods and being sustainable in the long term. In this connection, demand of organic market has increased gradually since last few years and so has the government promotion for organic farming.

The global ranking of India in organic agriculture stood at eighth position with 1.76 million hectares of area under it. During 2017-18 the share of organic agricultural land of India was 2.55 percent in the total world of organic agriculture. In 2016, Sikkim became the first organic state of India. Some key information about organic farming in India is given in Table 1.

India has the potential to become a major organic agriculture country, having international demand for our farm products, different agro-climatic regions for the cultivation of a number of crops, the size of the domestic market and above all the long tradition of environment-friendly farming and living. Considering the current status, India has a wide scope for increasing organic practices for achieving sustainable development of agriculture. The data for the year 2018-19 mentioned in Table 2 and Table 3 indicates the major state players in terms of organic agriculture area and organic food production.

Government of India has been very actively supporting promotion of organic farming. The National Programme for Organic Production (NPOP) was implemented in the year 2001. The first step in this regard involves the accreditation programme for certification bodies, standard for organic production, promotion of organic farming etc. The NPOP standards for production and accreditation system have been recognized by European Commission and Economics is the study of production and distribution and consumption of goods and services and teaches us most effective utilisation of available resources. Economists work in three broad sectors of the economy i.e. the primary sector related to raw materials, the secondary sector related to manufacturing and the third sector related to the services. Economics includes the study of how societies, governments, businesses, households, and individuals allocate their resources. This discipline has two important features. First, we develop conceptual models of behaviour to predict responses to changes in policy and market conditions. Second, we use rigorous statistical analysis to investigate these changes.

Prof (Dr) C. B. Singh & Dr O S Shekhar Singh

CAREER PROSPECTS IN ECONOMICS & BUSINESS STUDIES

- After liberalization, privatization and globalization (LPG) the job opportunities have increased many times. Economists analyze issues related to growth and development, welfare and policy formulation, and assess their long and short term significance for the country.
- Careers in economics are diverse with job roles covering everything from food and agriculture to business and banking. Depending on your area of interest, an economics degree will help you develop specialized analytical skills, enabling you to successfully enter multiple industries as a professional economist, or as another type of professional with an eye for economics.
- An economics degree will boost your employability in many areas, regardless of the industry you work within. This reflects strong demand throughout the global labour market, and the widely transferable analytical and problem solving skills developed by economics students.
- As a professional economist, you'll be involved in researching and analyzing economic data, issues and trends. To be a professional economist you'll also need to be confident in producing economic forecasts and reports to present to clients (individuals, companies, financial organizations and public bodies) and to advise on policy and/or business strategy accordingly.
- Possible employers include local and national government, public and private banks, insurance companies, think-tanks, large multinational companies, financial consultancies, accountancy firms and local authorities. A sound awareness of current affairs and economic contexts is important.

Scope of Eco Professionals

Eco Professionals/ Economists analyze issues related to growth and development, welfare and policy formulation, and assess their long and short term significance for the country. Economics is the study of production and distribution processes and the most effective means of utilizing available resources. Economists often specialize some most fascinating jobs. Some of these are as under:

- Research Economists: Develop mathematical models to explain and interpret business cycles, inflation, effects of tax policies or unemployment. Use Mathematics and Statistics to the theory and principles of Economics. Apply econometrics for analysis and prediction of all economic activity.
- Business Economists: Work as company's administrators, making decisions about company policies, plan future business activities in relation to general business conditions, national and international trade policies, governmental regulations and directives.
- Agricultural Economists: Study economic aspects of agricultural problems in order to increase efficiency of farm management, improve farm income and effect favourable agricultural legislation. Forecast production and consumption of agricultural products; locate optimum markets and deal with agricultural financing.

iv. Financial Economists: Develop monetary policies and predict financial activity. Examine credit structures and collection, banking methods and procedures to devise techniques for regulation of lending, fixing interest and discount rates.

v. International Economists: Collect and analyze statistical data and other information on foreign trade for favourable trade balances. Establish acceptable international trade policies, exchange controls and operation of foreign exchanges. Study, implementation and formulation of policies on investments, and transfer of capital on the international scene.

vi. Labour Economists: Study labour trends and policies, handle labour disputes, unions, industrial policies of management, work as advisors to government or industry.

vii. Industrial Economists: Studies the organizational structures of business to make maximum use of assets, investigate methods of financing, production costs, techniques of marketing policies for possible improvements. Analyze market trends to relate production for future consumption and interpret effects of government's regulations and legal restrictions on industrial policies.

viii. Economics careers in the public sector: In the public sector, economics careers are prolific, serving to keep governmental finances under control. Those who study economics are likely to be valued in all areas of public and private spending, including roles within pricing and risk analysis, financial consultancy and economic planning. While job roles vary hugely, economist careers in the public sector are often involved in public taxation, transport, commercial and waste services, energy and other forms of government spending. Despite the recent global recession, and the tightening of economic regulation by governments across the globe, economics students are currently seeing an increase in demand in this sector.

ix. Economics careers in Banking: Banking careers are very common among economics students, offering scope for high earnings and high demand for economists. Graduates with a background in economics are particularly valued for roles in financial control, financial planning, risk analysis, data analysis and consultancy. With a focus on keeping the financial requirements of clients and businesses on track, banking careers are largely concerned with advising and providing services for a range of banking clients and consumers.

x. Economics careers in business and financial consultancy: Economists and economics experts are at the heart of the business world and financial consulting. Roles within the business sector vary widely, but economics graduates may find positions in large and medium-sized business organizations where economic research is required. The role of an economic researcher is fairly self-explanatory, requiring in-depth knowledge of economics theories and models, thorough analytical and problem-solving skills and mathematical ability.

xii. Financial consultants: Financial consultants in the area of economics would fill similar roles, but may work for multiple clients instead of just one organization, producing reports and advising on business strategy. Up-to-date industry knowledge and awareness of corporate finance is essential in these roles.

xiii. Alternative economics degree jobs and careers: With a background in economics, it seems, anything is possible. Other common economics careers and roles include auditor, stockbroker, insurer, business manager, and retail merchandiser, pricing analyst, statistician, financial consultant and salesperson.

But what can you do with an economics degree if none of the above appeals to you? Well, you may want to also consider these broader options: business intelligence, international development, human resource management, IT, journalism, law, management, market research, politics, public relations, social research and taxation. Or, you could even become an entrepreneur and start your own business.

PROMOTING ORGANIC FARMING

United States Department of Agriculture (USDA). Establishment of the National Centre of Organic Farming (NCOF), Ghaziabad (Uttar Pradesh) in the year 2004 was another milestone in organic farming promotion sector. This centre is promoting National Project on Organic Farming (NPOF) at its HQ as well as its 7 regional centres at Bhubaneswar, Bangalore, Panchakula, Imphal, Jabalpur, Nagpur and Patna.

In recent years, some more schemes and programs were implemented by Government of India for promoting organic/ natural farming viz., (1) National Mission for Sustainable Agriculture (NMSA) (2) The Paramparagat Krishi Vikas Yojana (PKVY), (3) Mission Organic Value Chain Development in North East Region (MOVCDNER), (4) Rashtriya Krishi Vikas Yojana (RKVY), (5) The Mission for Integrated Development of Horticulture and (6) National Project on Organic Farming (NPOF).

TABLE-1: KEY INFORMATION OF ORGANIC FARMING IN INDIA

- India stands at 8th rank in the world.
- The total area under organic agriculture is 1.75 million hectares in India.
- India has 1.0 percent (1.75 million hectares) organic share to total agriculture land.
- India contributes 2.55 percent organic area to the world's total organic agriculture land.
- The total organic production is 16,75,560.70 metric tonnes in India.
- India has the highest number of organic producers in the world (i.e. 0.83 million) accounting to 30.88 percent.
- India's per capita organic food consumption is 0.2 Euro.
- India ranked 11th in organic product exports.
- Madhya Pradesh has the highest organic area in our country.
- Sikkim is India's first Organic state to convert the entire state into organic practices.

With rising issues about pesticide residue in crops, National Mission on Sustainable Agriculture (NMSA), came into light in 2014-2016 which was one out of eight missions under the National Action Plan on Climate Change (NAPCC). The strategies and programmes of Actions (POA) defined under this project aim at promoting sustainable agriculture through different key dimensions encompassing Indian agriculture viz., 'Improved crop seeds, livestock and fish cultures', 'Water Use Efficiency', 'Pest Management', 'Improved Farm Practices', 'Nutrient Management', 'Agricultural Insurance', 'Credit Support', 'Markets', 'Access to Information' and 'Livelihood Diversification'. It was a good step towards spreading awareness about organic farming, but not much successful in accelerating the organic and natural farming in India.

PKVY and MOVCDNER are two dedicated schemes for the promotion of organic farming through state governments. They are extension of the NMSA strategies ensuring the natural way of soil management and agricultural practices in rural and especially in north eastern region, however they were of inadequate scales and objectives. PKVY was launched in 2015 as an elaborate part of soil health management under the Centrally Sponsored Scheme i.e. NMSA. Under these two schemes, technical and financial support have been provided for formation of Farmers' Clusters/ Farmer Producer Organisations; incentives to farmers for procurement of agri-input, value addition of crops or agri-products including post-harvest infrastructure construction, packaging, branding, publicity, transportation, organic fairs, etc. Along with RKVY, PKVY was also a scheme which observed Zero Budget Natural Farming (ZBNF) Policy which encourages the use of cow-dung based manure for enhancing micro-organisms in soil. Taking into consideration socio-economic and geographical constraints of north east region, MOVCDNER aims to provide connection between the growers and consumers along with the entire value chain focusing on availability of facilities of collection, aggregation, processing, marketing and branding.

Another project in this line was National Project of Organic Farming (NPOF) which was conceptualized earlier but could not draw attention due to under-funding. Since last few years, efforts have been made to rejuvenate this project, which has the main objective of making available standard good quality organic inputs at optimum price. Even some other schemes like Capital Investment Subsidy Schemes (CISS), National Mission on Oilseeds and Oil Palm (NMOOP) and The National Food Security Mission (NFSM) are also promoting production of bio-fertilizers and organic fertilizers.

The Indian Council of Agricultural Research (ICAR) has also established a new research institute named 'National Organic Farming Research Institute' (ICAR-NOFRI) in Gangtok (Sikkim) in the year 2016. The major mandate of this institute is to conduct basic research on sustainable organic farming, systems for improving productivity, resource use efficiencies and quality of produce. ICAR's Network Project on Organic Farming, Modipuram (Uttar Pradesh) is actively working on technology packages for cultivation of organic crops suitable for the entire country. Besides, many ICAR institutions and state agricultural universities are also promoting organic farming through their research, training and extension activities.

Though a number of schemes have been introduced by the present government to promote natural organic farming, only 1.0 % of total agriculture land is organic. For increasing this percentage, authorities should also look into the gaps and try to fill them up with proper expertise. One of the major lacunae in the implementation of any scheme is non-availability of ground level expertise. Guiding farmers in a proper way at field level is very important, as farming is their source of income and it should give benefits to them. Farmers cannot wait for a long time to get benefits while taking decision for organic farming. Hence, the time for the mobilization process should be fast. Certification should be farmers-friendly. A bulk of paper work is not at all feasible for an Indian farmer. So, certification should be simple, easier and convenient. Need of organic farming competent seeds are also a very important area which research and development should address. And finally a strong market linkage will certainly encourage a farmer to convert to organic.

CONCLUSION

Consumption of organic food and beverage in India has increased in last few years due to its progressive middle class population, improved procuring power and interest for the better health and wellness benefits of certain organic products. India has a unique climate, ranging from the snow area to the hot climate of the equatorial region. This ensures that a large number of agri-produce like tea, coffee, spices, vegetables and fruits are available throughout the year; wheat and rice is grown twice a year and cotton once. All these have huge export and domestic potential for organic produce. There is 12 percent increase in organic food and beverage retail sales from $69 million in market year 2019 to $77 million in market year 2020. Even in the COVID-19 pandemic, market for organic food and beverages in India continues to be in rising direction. With favourable weather forecast, monsoons and a strong emphasis by the Indian government towards exports to fulfil U.S., European Union (EU) and South Asia demand, India's certified organic farming area is likely to increase. This orientation of the Government towards this mission is also clear as, in the Union-Budget 2020-21, a sum of 687.5 crore rupees has been allocated as compared to 461.35 crore rupees in 2019-20 for the organic farming sector. However, Government should be more concerned about the proper execution of all plans and reach of their financial support to their appropriate receiver. A simple certification system is also the need of the hour as present certification system is not only laborious but time taking. Urban or kitchen gardening should be encouraged by Government to create awareness and importance of organic farming in coming generation. Subsidized input rates can be a great way to encourage such activities in the daily life of common people. In this situation, when demand and interest are both present, any ground schemes and subsidized inputs will certainly change the scenario of organic sector in India.
