CHANGING WORK AND EMPLOYMENT SCENARIO

Dr. Ranjeet Mehta

Global shift towards increased deployment of IT by governments emerged in the nineties, with the advent of the World Wide Web. But today, the scale of the internet is so huge, that it doesn't make sense to look at the information on a monthly basis, or even to use daily figures.

Digital technology is at the center of today's economic development debate due to its wide use during the Covid-19 outbreak. Digital transformation is harnessing technology to change the way you do business. It's a fundamental cultural shift in how you interact with the customers.

In just one year, the COVID-19 crisis has brought about years of change in the way companies in all sectors and regions do business. According to a new McKinsey Global Survey of executives, their companies have accelerated the digitization of their customer and supply-chain interactions and their internal operations by three to four years. The share of digital or digitally enabled products in their portfolios has accelerated to a great extent. People expect most of these changes to be long lasting and companies are already making significant Investments in technologies.

Not that technology is making a difference today but it was already disrupting production processes, especially through the rapid scale-up of digital platforms. Digital technology has been challenging the traditional boundaries of firms, changing global value chains and the geography of jobs. New business models - digital platform firms - have been able to evolve rapidly from local start-ups to massive global companies, often with few employees or tangible assets. Digital platforms have enabled clusters of businesses to form in underdeveloped rural areas.

India is on the cusp of a massive digital revolution. We are in exciting times and being a digitally native country, there is an opportunity to ride on the digital infrastructure to strengthen payments, trade and information flows to aid sustainable and inclusive growth. India has skipped a generation in telecom technology-going from no connectivity to over 350 million mobile Internet users-in less than two decades. The impending growth of digital assets has offered India with many unique opportunities to leapfrog its traditional deficit in physical infrastructure. It will help enhance the economic conditions in remote areas, spur new businesses by enabling access for a large number of Micro, Small and Medium Enterprises (MSMEs), creating a strong digital identity for the country. Above all, digital infrastructure growth will empower the government to embrace and enable innovation, provide resources to help increase agricultural productivity as well as enable improved healthcare access for rural areas, potentially reducing mortality levels. It will also bring financial services to the unbanked rural and underprivileged communities and help fulfill the country's longstanding goal of education for all.

Technology has created seismic shifts in the mix of skills required to succeed in the labour market. While returns to routine, job-specific skills are declining, the premium for skills that cannot be replaced by robots has been increasing; these include cognitive skills such as critical thinking, as well as socio-behavioral skills such as managing and recognizing emotions that enhance teamwork. Earnings are higher for those who have a combination of these skills. The evolving world of work demands adaptable skills that enable workers to transfer more easily from one task to another.

Till nearly three decades ago for most of the students completing their SSC or Intermediate, the focus used to be on two entrance tests IIT entrance examination (now JEE) and PMT (now NEET). With passage of time more tests have come up, one of which is Common Law Entrance Examination popularly known as CLAT. The need for CLAT began to select students for admission to National Law Universities. Before such law universities were established, law as a subject was taught usually at universities and at their affiliated colleges. Only after graduation a candidate was eligible to enroll for LLB which is the common acronym for Bachelor of Law. National Law Universities came with five year integrated course leading to Bachelor of Law degree, known as BA. LLB Honours. This helped students to choose a career path in law right after their 12th standard. These Law Universities also brought a new respect to a qualification in law and legal education by maintaining high standard of education and also keeping the entry bar high.

The first National Law University was established at Bangalore in the year 1988. Now there are 22 such law universities spread all over India at Sonapat, Jabalpur, Shimla, Aurangabad, Mumbai, Hyderabad, Bengaluru, Raipur, Jodhpur, Lucknow, Nagpur, Tiruchirapalli, Visakha-patnam, Bhopal, Kolkata, Gandhinagar, Ranchi, Patna, Kochi, Patiala, Guwahati and Cuttack. So, we can say that every major Indian state has a National Law University.

Admission to integrated undergraduate programme in law B.A.LL B (Hons.) at all these universities is on the basis of performance in the admission test CLAT. At few such universities B.Sc.LL B (Hons.) is also conducted. Any student with minimum 45 percent marks in 12th standard (irrespective of discipline like Arts, Commerce, Science etc.), is eligible to appear in CLAT. This year CLAT is scheduled to be held in June. The objective of CLAT is to test a candidate for the aptitude and skills considered relevant for an education in law. Candidates are mainly tested for reasoning and comprehension. CLAT is also held for postgraduate courses (LLM etc.) at the above universities. This article is about CLAT for undergraduate courses which carries the standard term of UG-CLAT, referred here as just CLAT.

CLAT in its latest form comprises 150 questions which are expected to be answered in a period of 2 hours i.e. 120 minutes. Each correct answer will fetch 1 mark for the candidate while for every wrong answer 1/4 marks would be deducted as per the system of negative marking. The 150 questions are from 5

Digital technology has changed the terms of work. Rather than standard long-term contracts, digital technologies have given rise to more short-term work, often via online work platforms. These gigs make certain kinds of work more accessible and flexible. The gig economy as of now has been slow to take over traditional occupations. The largest three global gig platforms - Freelancer of Australia, Upwork in the United States, and Zhubajia in China - have 60 million total users; only 0.3-0.5% of the active labour force participate in the gig economy globally.

It is expected that COVID-19 pandemic will reinforce these pre-existing trends and increase the urgency of corresponding policy responses. We have noticed that the Platform firms are dominating markets even more. We are already seeing Amazon and Alibaba getting even bigger and stronger as brick-and-mortar stores are unable to compete. Companies will invest more in their ability to conduct business over the internet to be more resilient to potential lockdowns. Companies may also have more incentive to invest in automation and restore production to shield against value chain disruption.

Digital technology is also improving people's ability to work from home, although the amenability to remote work - which depends on the type of jobs and tasks to be done, as well as digital capacity - varies significantly across and within countries. Jobs that are conducive to remote work are more prevalent in rich countries, among workers with higher levels of education and in salaried full-time jobs. Digital infrastructure is scarce or of low quality in many developing countries.

The rapid spread of technology accelerated by the pandemic has led to a pressing need for businesses and governments to adapt it. Technology can be a boon to society if businesses and governments prepare and adapt. The pandemic has pushed societies to an inflection point where embracing technology is no longer an option but a necessity. It has also made workers more vulnerable. With the right steps and actions, businesses and governments can take the crisis as an opportunity to build for the future.

Many businesses, especially in developing economies, are digitally disconnected. They may not have access to workers with the right skills and face challenging business environments. Workers, on the other hand, have little protection and do not have the skills or flexibility in labour markets to adapt. To face these challenges, businesses need to embrace technology and upgrade training programs to equip their workers with the best skills. Businesses can also consider apprenticeships to equip future workers with the right sets of skills.

As businesses around the world were forced into work-from-home environments due to COVID-19 stay-at-home orders, what was once vehemently opposed by some organizations became their only mode of operation. So the new reality is - Twitter announced that it will allow its employees to work from home "forever," in part because "the past few months have proven we can make that work" assuming an employee has a role that is possible to do remotely and desires to continue to work from home. Mark Zuckerberg announced that he expects half of Facebook's employees will work remotely within the next five to 10 years even after COVID restrictions are lifted. Google declared the majority of its employees would continue working from home until 2021.

COVID-19 pandemic has already unleashed a new era of change for businesses around the world. Companies have seen the effects of high-consequence, low-likelihood risks firsthand. While corporate decision makers cannot plan for every potential risk, but in some ways they can prepare for extraordinary risks, determine which protections are worth the investment, and position themselves for better resiliency. Companies are already focusing on areas such as prioritizing business building for organic growth, launching new businesses at an accelerated rate. The strongest companies are also reinventing themselves through next-normal operating models, capitalizing on this flexible moment and the resulting spread of agile processes, quicker ways of working and increased speed and productivity. The disruption has revealed varying levels of preparedness or unpreparedness amongst the world's leading companies. However, there is little time to wait around as the organizations that hope to thrive in the post-COVID must find a way to reinvent themselves.

What impacts will work from home have on job market? Working from home could completely transform the job market and could mean a truly global competition for every single job role. If one can work from home in India with his company in California or Canada just as well, what stops someone in Chile or Indonesia from being a good, or even better fit for the job? When you can work from home, you could potentially work from anywhere, which means the job market could become truly globalized.

What does look clear is that the global labour market will undergo very significant changes, derived from the inertia to which it had previously been subjected, besides from the huge impact of the pandemic. The global labour market was already going through radical changes over the last few years but there is a need to evaluate how the COVID-19 crisis will affect this ongoing transformation.

The pandemic has sent the demand for talent skyrocketing in certain industries. Healthcare has shot to the top of the list, with the most job openings among industries in many countries. One analysis by McKinsey in the US found that out of the top 15 occupations that saw an increase in job postings since the pandemic started, eight are from healthcare and R&D related sectors. Industries related to transportation of goods continue to need manpower, because global trade continues despite the tourism crash; and companies have even started planning for next year's hiring as well. Logistics has similarly displaced retail and hospitality as the top hiring sector in many countries as consumers shift their spending online. The fallout of the pandemic has already accelerated digitization and automation across a range of industries and sectors. This calls for upskilling and reskilling, for both human skills as well as digital skills.

At the same time, policymakers have an equally major role in supporting employers, especially the MSMEs that account for the majority of employment in India and many other world economies. Employers, meanwhile, need to be ready to pivot their businesses towards the new models that are emerging. Despite the pinch of the COVID-19 businesses must continue to look ahead with optimism. Time is not very far, when work from home concept will have a sizable share in employment sector throwing up new job opportunities for the unemployed youths located in far flung areas.

GETTING READY FOR COMMON LAW ...

subjects viz. English language, Current affairs (inclusive of general knowledge), legal reasoning, logical reasoning and lastly quantitative techniques. It is important to note that distribution of these 150 questions is not equal in given five segments. CLAT 2021 will be conducted in offline mode, so it's not a computer based examination.

Pattern of questions under all these subjects is given below describing the approach required to answer these.

English language: The medium of law course is English .This is only one of the reasons for the applicants being tested in English. The segment of English is about 20 percent with 28 to 32 questions. There will be passages between 400 to 500 words on a general interest topic or in fictional or non-fictional form. Each of the passage will have questions based on it expecting you to use your skills of comprehension, expression and observation. The questions in this segment may ask you to read and comprehend the main points in the passage and also any view points, opinion or argument presented in the passage, draw inferences and conclusions, compare or contrast the points, explain the meanings of selected words given in the passage and may be summarizing the passage.

To do well in this section, you need to read the passage fast but with attention, understand the issues raised and the ideas behind it. In some cases the ideas may be different from what you have been thinking or on a topic you are not that much familiar with. These things shouldn't worry you. Let it be clear that you have a passage and you have to answer the questions in relation to the passage. Your personal opinion or thinking are of not any significance here. You need to be objective and keep away your biases, in case you have any. Also since the test is objective, you're already provided with the correct answer in one of the options. You have to identify that option in the least possible time.

Current Affairs and General Knowledge: In many other competitive examinations, in the section of general awareness, direct questions are asked (e.g. which of the following is the official currency of Mangolia?) but in CLAT, this section is also passage based. The passage will be related to some news or event of significance from India or the world or related to art, culture, history, international affair, legal matter etc. The questions will relate to the passage but the answer may be outside the passage. For example if there is a passage on the latest Loksabha elections, there may be a question that in which year Loksabha elections were held in the country for the first time.

This section is expected to contain 35 to 39 questions and will comprise 25 percent of the test. To score high in the segment of general knowledge and current affairs, you have to regularly refer to national newspapers. It would be better if you note down important news items in a diary. Think about which can be the possible questions related to these news. A general knowledge book is must to be referred to along with a year book.

Being passage based the section is easier than it would've been with as many as 40 independent questions.

Legal Reasoning: This section is exclusive to CLAT. In this section also,you may expect 35 to 39 questions which roughly comprises 25 percent of the test. As the term legal reasoning suggests here you'll be exposed to questions dealing with wrong or right, legal points or some issue of ethics. So you'll have passages with an issues of law, public policy or moral philosophy. To answer the questions you needn't have studied these subjects before. All you need is common sense to understand the stated facts, draw proper inference after identifying the key points which the moral or legal dilemma can be related to.

To prepare for this section study the court decisions published in general and financial newspapers and try to understand what made the court to take that particular decision. You may go through important legal decision in past one year. Reading few articles on moral philosophy and cases related to it may also help. While answering questions in this section you need to focus on legal principles involved. However you may also be required to apply common sense, reasoning and rational assumptions within the scope of that principle or rule.

Logical Reasoning : Logical Reasoning is a common part of competitive and entrance tests/ examinations such as IBPS PO, CAT etc. The format of questions may vary from examination to examination. In CLAT, this section will comprise smaller passages and questions emanating from those passages. The questions may require you to identify the logic set out in the passage and the premises and conclusions that can be drawn from these, make inference that follows from the passage and apply these inferences to other situations, analyze patterns of reasoning and assess how conclusions depend on particular premise or evidence, draw relationships and analogies, identify similarities and contradictions and weigh the relevance of arguments, etc.

In any management entrance test guide you'll find chapters on logical reasoning with sample questions. You may also find material with solved questions with explanations. After going through these you should practice a lot to achieve accuracy and speed.

There would be 28 to 32 questions on logical reasoning with an approximate weightage of 20 percent.

Quantitative Techniques: In other entrance tests this section may have a different nomenclature such as quantitative aptitude or numerical ability. Quantitative techniques part in CLAT will have only 13 to 17 questions representing just 10 percent of the test. This section would comprise small set of facts or propositions or other textual, graphical, pictorial or diagrammatic representation containing numerical information after which a series of question would follow. The candidates are expected to choose selective information from the above representation and apply mathematical operation as required. For example in a graph, sales for different years may be given and you may be asked about the sum of difference in two different year sets.

This section will have questions from topics which we studied in mathematics in HSC (10th standard).To solve this section you need to have clear concepts of BODMAS, ratio, fraction, equation, mensuration among others. You should solve a lot of questions to practice and achieve perfection.

Choose your approach

There can't be one perfect approach to solve a paper like CLAT. You need to choose what works best for you.When the questions are passage based, one approach can be to read the passage with complete attention and then look at the questions. It is more suitable where the passage is relatively complex and you can't read it fast as comprehending would be difficult .The other approach could be skimming through the passage, then look at the questions and come back to passage again to identify those parts where answers may be present. This may not work well in case of a complex passage. Many candidates read the questions first and then go through the passage to find related answers. This approach may save time and is particularly suitable when the passage is simple and/or just fact based. In fact, to get a feel of all these approaches, you need to work with these by attempting few sample papers.

Elimination or Selection

When it comes to objective type questions, a candidate has two ways to find the right answer selection and elimination. Selection, of course, is most widely used method. When you have absolute surety about a particular answer, use this method without hesitation. But where you're in doubt, keep away from the least possible options applying elimination and choose your answer from the remaining options to improve your chances of scoring well.

Managing your time during the test

CLAT needs you to solve 150 questions in 120 minutes. It means on an average you have less than a minute per question. All questions wouldn't require equal time; some would need more and some less. You should not waste any minute and mark quickly the answers once decided.

Making best use of available resources

If you visit CLAT website, you'll find a link to sample questions. Answer to these questions have also been provided. The best part is wherever applicable rationale for correct answer has also been mentioned. Also under the link of 'Learning Tools and Materials' comprehensive explanation of test pattern and solving strategy are given.To all those candidates whose application for CLAT is accepted the Consortium organising the exam will provide access to a learning platform containing preparatory material. After attempting the preparatory tests candidates may check their scores which can be improved with further practice.

Exclusive guides for CLAT preparation are available in the market. You may get one or two for you after ascertaining their quality. Various websites also provide free access to preparation material including sample questions and model papers etc.

Beyond National Law Universities

Your CLAT score is accepted at various other institutes for admission to LLB or five years integrated courses. So even if you're not targeting the National Law Universities, you may think of having a CLAT score which will be handy for those who for some reason couldn't make it to any of the 22 National Law Universities. However, you need to make sure that the institute accepting you on the basis of CLAT score provides quality education, charges reasonable fee and the degree offered by it carries value in the job market.
